

Committee Named To Secure Frankfort Township Oil Leases

The oil lease drive in Frankfort township in now under way and soon as leases have been signed up covering thirty (30) sections of land in Frankfort township and adjoining territory, the oil promoters expect to start drilling for oil.

Another meeting was held Tuesday night in the Frankfort hall at which the oil leases were discussed and a committee was appointed to visit all the land owners in the oil lease zone to secure their signatures to the leases.

At the Tuesday night meeting at which Attorney A. H. Krusemark presided, it was pointed out that geologists have made a careful study of the land in this section and are satisfied that oil will be found, but just at what depth is not known.

According to the plans outlined the leases will run for a five year period. The lease rate will be twenty-five (25) cents per acre with the assurance that drilling for oil will be started within the year. If no drilling is done nor the lease fee paid, the lease so effected will be void.

The oil promoters do not necessarily have to drill on every farm on which leases are secured but if they pay up the lease rentals each year the lease is valid.

The land owners in this section are much interested in the oil lease campaign and it is expected that there will be little difficulty experienced in securing the leases on 30 sections. Among those on the committee engaged in visiting the various land owners and securing the oil leases are William Lankenau, Joseph McGlashen, Attorney A. H. Krusemark, Wm. C. Bettenhausen, John Harnack, Emil Deist, Wm. Rahm and Frank Kohlhaugen.

About 150 farmers attended the meeting Tuesday night.

Few Cases Tried In County Court Says D. R. Anderson

In the closing days of his primary campaign speeches, D. R. It is high time that the voters place a man of experience and ability in this court, so that this court will at least try one-fourth of the law suits of the county.

Tried For Oil At Mokena Years Ago

The present oil lease movement in Frankfort township, has recalled a story that quite a number of years ago it was thought that there was a prospect of oil on the farm now owned and occupied by Daniel C. Lauffer, just northeast of the Summit Hill station and that an experiment was made with an auger with an iron rod about 20 feet attached. Of course with such a primitive experiment of only a few feet, they did not strike oil, besides at those times nobody cared much for oil or gasoline.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A DOUBLE SCARE

BLACKY the Crow sat in the Big Hickory tree with his head cocked on one side, as he looked far across the Green Meadows to where a familiar figure was just turning out of the Long Lane which comes down from Farmer Brown's. That familiar figure was Farmer Brown's boy. Blacky had known him ever since he could remember.

"Times have changed," thought Blacky. "Times certainly have changed a whole lot. Farmer Brown's boy is different. The time was when I always looked first thing to see if he had a gun with him. He used to try to fool me about that gun, but he never did. These days I never have to think about a gun, so far as he is concerned. I wish that all the rest of the two-legged creatures in this world were like him. It certainly would make it a whole lot easier for us Crows in corn-sprouting time. But then it would take a whole lot of fun out of life, too," Blacky grinned wickedly. "It certainly would be tame and no fun at all if there were no terrible guns to watch out for."

Farmer Brown's boy turned out of the Long Lane onto the Green Meadows and headed straight across towards the Big Hickory tree and the Smiling Pool. Blacky continued to watch him with the very lively interest which he always takes in whatever Farmer Brown or Farmer Brown's boy may happen to be doing.

As he strode along through the meadow grass, he was whistling. He usually is whistling when he is outside the house. So far as Blacky could see, Farmer Brown's boy hadn't a care in the world. Suddenly, without any warning at all, Farmer Brown's boy broke off his whistle with a yell. He jumped as if he had been stung and, reaching over, slapped at one leg.

Blacky the Crow sat up suddenly, and his bright eyes sparkled. It was perfectly plain to Blacky that Farmer

Brown's boy had had a scare of some kind. Blacky's eyes are very keen. There is very little that they miss. But look as he would, Blacky couldn't see a single thing which could possibly have frightened Farmer Brown's boy.

Blacky spread his wings and flew over toward Farmer Brown's boy. Although he wasn't afraid, or at any rate wouldn't admit that he was, he flew high. Blacky does not believe in taking any unnecessary risks. Safety first is Blacky's motto.

As he flew over Farmer Brown's boy, Blacky moved as slowly as he could, and his sharp eyes searched all around in the grass for something which might have frightened Farmer Brown's boy. Not a thing was to be seen. By this time Farmer Brown's boy was sitting down. With one hand he was holding to one leg just above the knee, and with the other he was rolling up the leg of his trousers. More than this, Blacky could not see, because you know he could not stand still in the air. To this day he does not know what happened.

What did happen was this: When Nimble Heels the Jumping Mouse was awakened from his pleasant dreams, it was by the approach of Farmer Brown's boy. In his fright he jumped blindly, not looking to see where he was going; and, without meaning to at all, he jumped right up inside the trouser's leg of Farmer Brown's boy. It is a question which was the most startled—Nimble Heels to find himself in such a strange place, or Farmer Brown's boy. It was a double scare. Do you wonder that Farmer Brown's boy jumped and yelled?

THE WEDDING MARCH MURDER

by
Monte Barrett

Copyright, 1933,
by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.
WNU Service.

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Peter Cardigan, with Sergeant Kilday, begins the investigation. Franklin, while waiting, had visitors, among them his mistress, "Choo Choo" Train; his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylie; Daniel Bullis, politician, and a woman in a blue frock. Rylie Carmody admits trying to stop the wedding, after being informed by Webster Spears that Franklin was still friendly with Choo Choo, despite his approaching marriage. Kilday secures the dead man's keys. From Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, Rylie's friend, the investigators learn nothing. An interview with Bullis is fruitless. Webster Spears admits informing Rylie Carmody of Franklin's relations with Choo Choo, for Doris Carmody's sake, in the hope of preventing the wedding. Fletcher, Franklin's man-servant, is reticent. An interview with Milo Dunbar, Franklin's law partner, and search of the dead man's office, reveals nothing of importance. Choo Choo admits her relations with Franklin were to continue after his marriage. Six of the seven keys Franklin carried are traced. Callis Shipley, again interviewed, confesses previous deception, but nothing new is elucidated. Kilday decides to arrest Webster Spears and have Rylie Carmody shadowed.

CHAPTER VIII

An Unexpected Appeal

Aside from the arrest of Webster Spears, there were no new developments that afternoon. The newspapers, of course, made much of the arrest. Whatever else he had done, the sergeant had placated the press. And there seemed to be no doubt in his mind concerning Spears' guilt.

With Peter Cardigan it was different.

"Let's go back to St. Matthew's," he suggested, as he and Kilday were returning downtown. "It's only a few blocks out of our way."

"We've been over that place with a fine-toothed comb," the sergeant demurred. "There's nothing more to find there."

Nevertheless, he accompanied his friend for another visit to the scene of the crime. Except for one circumstance, he had been correct. That was the empty scabbard which had contained the knife with which Franklin had been killed. It still hung where Peter had first seen it, on the west wall of the rector's study, just to the right of the door leading into the sacristy and about eight feet high on the wall.

Peter whistled tunelessly as he surveyed the room, his eyes finally coming to rest on the scabbard. The sergeant, who had been watching him curiously, scowled thoughtfully.

"H'm," said Peter. Then, turning to his friend, "If Spears is guilty," he said, "he entered through the rear door. We know that, because there was some one in the sacristy all the time and we have been able to account for every one who came in the other way."

"Let us try to reconstruct the scene. You move over to the rear door. There. Now I'm Jim Franklin, standing here in the door leading into the sacristy. Nick Royce was standing out there. This door is open, and my back is to you. I'm looking toward Royce. Now open the door, Sergeant, just as quietly as you can."

The detective cautiously turned the knob. There was no sound. But as the door swung slowly back, it creaked, mournfully. Cardigan smiled.

"At least we know the murderer didn't surprise Franklin," he declared. "But we haven't thought so, all along. All right, I turn and see you standing in the door way. I recognize you, don't I? You don't think Franklin was alarmed by the sight of his visitor, do you?"

"Franklin knew Webster Spears," was Kilday's laconic rejoinder. "I don't think the sight of him would have frightened him."

"Regardless of who it was," Peter declared emphatically, "Franklin wasn't alarmed. We know that because Nick Royce, his best man, was only a few feet away in the sacristy and the door between was ajar."

"All right," Kilday agreed. "Neither of us believes Franklin was alarmed."

"Now, one of these two men had Franklin's revolver," the novelist continued. "I think it was the murderer. If Franklin had had it, he surely would have tried to use it, when his assailant reached for that dagger on the wall. Remember, the murderer had to come all the way across the room to get that knife. In addition, you could hardly have expected Franklin to be carrying a weapon to his wedding, unless he had very unusual reasons for believing his life to be in danger. If he had thought that, surely he would have been alarmed when the murderer entered."

"That's part of my case," replied the sergeant impatiently. "I've told you—the man who came here to murder Franklin didn't want to be seen. He wasn't taking any unnecessary chances. Those people who entered the other way deliberately destroyed any possible alibi in advance. That's why I'm inclined to believe they didn't do it. Besides, we know that Spears left the church just a few minutes before the murder occurred. He just had time to get back here."

Peter glanced again at the empty scabbard, high on the wall. "That's the only way I can make it fit."

"More proof," observed the sergeant, "that the murderer either knew Franklin intimately, or else knew some one who did. Otherwise, how could he have obtained the revolver?"

"All right," Peter continued. "So far we agree. Now, when did the murderer change his mind about using the gun and decide in favor of the knife?"

"When he came through that door. The knife was hanging exactly opposite the back door. He probably figured it was quieter and would give him a better opportunity to escape. Incidentally, that proves he did come through the back door."

"We still agree," declared the novelist, "but from this point on, we differ. Let me tell you why. In my opinion, only a large powerful man would have abandoned a revolver in favor of a knife. It seems to me that was the action of a man who had considerable confidence in his own strength. Remember, Franklin was a big man. Webster Spears is comparatively small, not more than five feet nine." He shrugged. "Oh, I know we're branching off into psychology, but it's the truth, isn't it? Big men want to get at grips with their adversaries. Little men back off. They want long-range weapons."

Kilday stroked the bristles on his chin thoughtfully. "Usually, that would be right," he admitted cautiously. "But other elements entered into this. The dagger was quiet. The revolver would make a noise. That was a powerful argument in favor of the dagger, one that would upset these other calculations of yours."

"Possibly," conceded Peter. "But in times of stress, men are more apt to run true to form than otherwise. And

"I Had Hoped to Find You Alone. May I Come In?"

I have reason for believing Spears could not have been the wielder of that knife."

Kilday showed his skepticism. The novelist walked to the wall, reaching toward the empty scabbard. Had the dagger been there, he could have withdrawn it without any great difficulty, although it was fully eight feet from the floor.

"But I am six feet two," he pointed out. "While it wouldn't have been any great trick for me, or for anyone six feet or more in height, that's quite a stretch for a man of Spears' build. Had he been able to reach it at all, he would have had to stand on tiptoe. What would Franklin have been doing while he was stretching for that knife? It doesn't fit, Kilday. I can't picture Webster Spears as the murderer."

The detective smiled blandly. "You'd better join the other side," he said. "You'd make a good witness for the defense. But how are you going to explain Spears' attempts to halt the wedding? We know he did. We know he had a motive for the crime. The Shipley girl gave some damaging evidence against him, although she changed it after her visit to his house last night—a visit, mind you, which both she and Spears deny, but which we know occurred, nevertheless."

"Oh, I know," he shrugged, "that we can find a motive for a dozen people. But Spears is the only one who appears to have been doing anything about it. He and Rylie Carmody. The guilt lies somewhere between those two and I think I have the right one."

"Then you don't attach any further significance to the woman in blue—or to Daniel Bullis?"

"Not unless the woman in blue was Callis Shipley," declared the detective grimly. "And as for Bullis—well, you just eliminated him yourself. Bullis was Franklin's enemy. Would Franklin have permitted him to enter without making any outcry which would have warned Royce of the situation? Yet you have just demonstrated that Franklin certainly must have known his murderer and thought the visit a friendly one. I think that lets Bullis out. No," Kilday persisted doggedly, "all trails lead to Spears. The only bit of evidence you have produced in his defense is that he might have had difficulty in reaching the knife. You have shown that the rear door creaks, which might have warned Franklin when his assailant entered. Yet we know that several persons previously left by this door—Bullis, the woman in blue and Choo Choo Train. They might have left it open. Spears might have entered silently, secured the knife before Franklin was aware of his presence, and struck him down before he had time to make any outcry. Everything you have developed here is purely along the line of supposition."

They left, Kilday to return to his office, the novelist to his apartment, but Peter was dissatisfied with the conclusions reached by his friend. In his own mind, there existed considerable doubt concerning Webster Spears' guilt. And yet the logic applied by the detective was sound. It was Spears who had attempted to halt the wedding. Spears who had involved Rylie Carmody, and probably he, also, who had been the author of those telephone calls to Choo Choo Train and Ambrose Carmody. He had quit the church in time to commit the crime, making some remark in regard to halting the wedding, and certainly he had not told the full truth when questioned. Opposed to these arguments, Peter had only the conviction that he could not have reached that dagger on the wall and a reluctant sympathy for Callis Shipley who was so inextricably involved in any case made against either Spears or Rylie Carmody. Peter thumped the arms of his chair and glared moodily into space. Had a disturbingly beautiful girl who was obviously trying to protect some one warped his judgment completely? Again and again he reviewed the evidence as Kilday had developed it. Each time he argued completely around the circle, arriving back at Callis Shipley. What had there been between this girl and Spears? Or Franklin? If Spears were guilty, hadn't his love for Doris Carmody been the actuating motive for the crime? If so, why was Callis protecting him? That didn't fit. But neither could he make the sympathy which this girl had aroused in him fit in with the fact that she had withheld the truth concerning her visit to Webster Spears. Nothing seemed to fit in this strange case.

His reverie was interrupted by the door-bell. In spite of his effort, he did not know how well he succeeded in concealing his surprise. His visitor was Callis Shipley.

The friendly warmth of her blue gaze was clouded with trouble.

She looked past him, into the book-lined room, exploring it with a rapid glance before she spoke.

"I had hoped to find you alone. May I come in?"

"Of course."

Peter drew his own wide chair closer to the table for her and turned on the reading light. The waning afternoon had filled the room with shadows.

For himself, he chose a chair still recessed in gloom, where the lamp's pale rays might not betray the alert gleam of his eyes, and waited for the girl to speak.

"I suppose you know Web has been arrested," she began uneasily.

He nodded. "And Rylie is being followed by detectives."

Peter thought briefly how angered Kilday would have been, had he known the activities of his detective had been so promptly discovered.

"Do you think either of them had anything to do with the crime?" the girl demanded.

She leaned forward, lips parted, trying to penetrate the dusk which protected Cardigan's expression.

"Do you think so?" the novelist parried.

"It's unthinkable," declared the girl vehemently. "They aren't the sort who murder people. They are just nice boys, both of them. They aren't criminals."

"You ask me to have more confidence in them than you have," Peter pointed out. "You admit that you were afraid Rylie Carmody had something to do with it, at first. You were afraid to tell us that you rode home from the church with him. You attempted to deceive us about your visit with Webster Spears last night. And after that visit, you changed your testimony in regard to the remark Spears made when he left the church."

Peter's intent gaze studied the expression of the girl's face. "You must admit," he concluded, "all this isn't calculated to increase our belief in the innocence of these two young men."

Two spots of color flamed in the girl's cheeks. The earnestness of her manner, as she leaned toward him, impressed Peter more than he wished to admit. "That's why I am here," she declared fervently. "It is largely my fault that they are both under suspicion. I—I was trying to help Rylie. That's why I attempted to deceive you. And Web was doing the same thing. Oh," she caught her lip between her teeth, "you don't need to tell me how wrong I was. I've discovered that for myself. But Rylie didn't have any more to do with Jim Franklin's death than you did. Nor did Web. I'll answer all your questions now. I'll tell you the whole truth. I want to help. I want you to discover what a terrible mistake you are making. I did ride home with Rylie. I didn't admit it because—well, because I was afraid he might be suspected and I didn't want anyone to know he had returned to the church. That's the truth. I was at Web's last night when you and Sergeant Kilday called, but we didn't want you to know it because we were trying to change our testimony so you wouldn't suspect Rylie any more."

"Career" Never of First Importance to Women

"Try it—it's important for you to know for the rest of your life that you haven't really missed anything." The idea contained in this short paragraph called forth the following comment from a widely read woman writer:

"That thought on the things we miss looms so much larger and more important and more pleasurable just because we have missed them! It brought to my mind the thought of the married women who bemoan the careers they have missed, or think they might have had."

"The most happily married woman I know is one who previously had a 'career,' that is, she had an opportunity to work for a living at a profession. She achieved success at it, and then gave it up to marry and settle down in a suburb. She now gives her entire time to her two children and her attractive, one-maid home."

"Wherever that woman goes, she is approached by others, admiring, envious, puzzled, who exclaim, 'Oh—were you a decorator—really—with your own studio? And don't tell me you gave it all up when you married!' Then 'Oh—if I could do the sort of thing you did, nothing would make me give it up! But I never had the chance!'"

"But the woman who could do it—who did do it—differed from them in her sense of values. You see, she had not missed anything."

"To the woman who has missed it, a 'career' is very likely to seem all pleasurable excitement. The grinding work necessary to attain and then keep one's place; the strain of competition, the subordinating of all pleasures or interests that might in any way interfere with one's work, the constant and unceasing necessity for concentrating on that one aim, the heartbreak of failures and setbacks—all these are unknown to her. But they are every-day experiences of every man and woman faced with the responsibility of earning a living, of obtaining the wherewithal to keep the wheels of mere existence going 'round in the face of relentlessly recurring firsts of the month! "The woman who has tried that is not likely to exaggerate its advantages or to feel imposed upon because some one else has taken on that job for her. Also it will not be difficult for her to appreciate the compensating factors in just keeping house. It is too bad for many discontented wives that they 'never had the chance.'"

CONOCO INTRODUCES A Remarkable new MOTOR OIL

Its lower consumption and greater protection to motors proved by the most convincing test ever made!

THIS new oil has a tremendously increased "film strength"—and a penetrative oiliness to always protect your motor. The "Hidden Quart" never leaves a dry spot or a bearing without lubrication—it resists dilution—and eliminates much trouble caused by carbon and sludge.

New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil excels in the most convincing test ever made, under the supervision of the AAA Contest Board.

IN presenting New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil you are furnished facts of performance. You will at once be convinced of the direct value of this new oil. A test so dramatic, so honest, that it will go down in history!

This test was held at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway. The Contest Board of the American Automobile Association supervised all details, thus assuring an unbiased opinion. Six new regular stock cars were delivered direct to them. They tested and measured each to obtain an equal condition in all.

Six brands of motor oil, of the same S. A. E. grade, were used. Five of them, all purchased by the AAA on the open market, were nationally known, widely recognized leaders. The other one was New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil. All cars were then carefully broken in for 2500 miles. Five quarts, a new and complete fill, were put in each car and the crankcases sealed. Then the real battle for supremacy began. The cars were driven for as long as the motors continued to operate.

Here are the results: Oil No. 4 quit at 1713.2 miles; Oil No. 6 quit at 1764.4 miles; Oil No. 5 wrecked the motor at 1815.9; Oil No. 1 ceased its lubricative protection at 2266.8 miles; and Oil No. 3 at 3318.8 miles.

New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil carried on to a total 4729 miles! Over three thousand miles farther than the first oil to go out, and over fourteen hundred miles farther than the final oil of the five!

It is the Germ Processing principle, only used by Conoco, that won the test. This "Hidden Quart" that lubricates all parts at all times—that stays up in your motor and never drains away. Drive into a Conoco Station or Dealer for a fill. You are getting the most in lubrication value that money can buy.

The process which gives these exclusive new features is protected by recent U. S. patents. Conoco refines a high quality paraffin base oil and then adds the extra oiliness that is absolutely necessary to obtain the protection and low consumption every motorist should demand.

- 1 The Representatives of the Contest Board of the AAA who supervised every detail of the test.
- 2 Five quarts of each brand of oil were carefully put in the cars by AAA officials.
- 3 The official sealing of crankcases after final fill of five quarts was put in.
- 4 These were new motors before the test. They were wrecked to prove to you how to protect yours.

Warning TO NEW CAR OWNERS...

Some car manufacturers are using new types of bearings which will stand greater pressures and temperatures, resulting from increased power and speed. New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil has been exhaustively tested on these new bearings. The results show that it gives them greater protection against damage than many straight mineral oils now on the market.

Protect your new car by using the motor oil you can be sure of.

Chas. Lauth For Will County Treas.

Will county republicans in large numbers are backing the candidacy of Charles Lauth for nomination for county treasurer. They are pointing out that his practical experience with details of the county's business, together with the good judgment he displayed as supervisor, makes him an ideal candidate, and that his election will assure the county of efficient and proper conduct of the important office he is seeking.

Mr. Lauth served seven years as Joliet township supervisor, and during that time was a member of some of the county's most important committees.

He was Joliet township's direct representative in the extensive relief work program carried on thru the cooperation of the Will County Emergency Relief committee and other local relief agencies. He was in close touch with this work during the tense period when Will county's number of families on the relief rolls increased from 200 to more than 5000. His good judgment, his sympathetic understanding and his tireless energy were important factors in the efficiency of service and economy of operation in this important work.

As custodian of the township supervisors' and highway funds, Mr. Lauth had the handling of more than one and a half million dollars, and as a member of the county right-of-way committee he took an active part in securing the rights-of-way for Routes 49, 50 and 69, and for the extension of Route 113 from Braidwood to Coal City.

Bell Should Win Says Chicago Tribune

No newspaper in the United States keeps its finger in the political press more completely than does the Chicago Tribune, and no paper has ever been able to forecast with greater accuracy results. In a careful survey of campaign conditions in the Eleventh Congressional District, the results of which was published Sunday, April 1, Parke Brown, feature writer under the caption of "There's a Fight in the 11th District For Congress," predicts the nomination of James C. Bell. In part the Tribune says:

"There are six entries, but it is conceded the principal contenders are Chauncey W. Reed, West Chicago, state's attorney of DuPage county; James C. Bell, Joliet, district insurance agent, and James E. Harley of Aurora, who has been both mayor and postmaster of that city Reed is under attack on his record as a law enforcer. Two of the candidates not considered among the leaders, Dr. W. V. Hopf and Oliver M. Olson, are both from Wheaton, in Reed's county, and both are said to be criticizing the prosecutor severely. These two also split the Reed vote in the home county and Bell has the advantage of being the only candidate from Will County. Reed always has benefited from his activities among service men, but Bell, who is a first lieutenant in the marine corps reserve, is said to have a standoff with him on that score. Alumni of the University of Illinois, also are said to be active for Bell. He was president of the Student Council of the institution in 1924."

James C. Bell is a business man of Joliet with an outstanding record of accomplishments in his community and is regarded by all who know him as an able leader of indomitable courage and as such is the man the voters of the Eleventh Congressional District need as their representative in Congress.

LACK OF TELEPHONE PROVES DISASTROUS—Lehigh, Neb., World

The need of a telephone in the house was brought out forcibly when a bolt of lightning set fire to buildings on the Yunek farm northwest of town last Friday morning. With no means of summoning help at his command, Mr. Knapp rushed to the home of a neighbor to use his phone but found also that the neighbor was without a telephone. He was then obliged to go all the way to town to call the Fire Department and by the time help reached the farm great damage had been done by the flames. The cost of telephone service could have been paid for many times over with the amount of money involved in the loss.

Barr Supported School Revenue Bills

Carlinville, Ill. March, 30, 1934
Hon. Richard J. Barr,
State Senator, 41st District,
Joliet, Ill.
My Dear Sir:—

As legislative agent of the State Teachers Association I am writing this to express my gratitude to you for your loyalty and service to the cause of education as demonstrated by your support of all school revenue bills in the present third special session of the 58th General Assembly.

In performing your duties as Senator, you rose entirely above partisan politics and evidently considered the education and welfare of the children of Illinois as purposes of legislation too sacred to be entangled in the maze of partisanship. The stand you took was a demonstration not only of patriotic citizenship but also of real statesmanship.

In thus commending you for your great service to education I believe I am speaking for the majority of teachers and all others who want the present generation of children to have a fair chance, and who are making a determined fight to save the schools. All friends of the children in your Senatorial District ought to do their utmost to keep you in your position as State Senator as long as you give such helpful service in the cause of education.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) Robert C. Moore,
Secty. Illinois State Teachers Association.

Chicago Suburbs Have Candidate for Cook Co., Sheriff

The Chicago Suburbs have never had the distinction of claiming a Sheriff of Cook County as their own. In the candidacy of Fred T. Ehlert for the Republican nomination for the office of Sheriff of Cook County, Ehlert, head of the Dolton Police Department for the past five years, appears not only as an outstanding candidate for the office, but as the only candidate on whom it is possible to bestow this distinction. It was the work of Ehlert in bringing to justice, the slayers of a Dolton policeman, and the apprehension of a number of auto thieves which caused the people of his district to place him as a candidate for Sheriff.

Mr. Ehlert received his education at the University of Illinois. He is the present Exalted Ruler of the Harvey Elks, a member of the Odd Fellows and of Lowvale Lodge, A. F. and A. M. He is a married man and lives at Dolton.

Cook County

Slashes Real Estate

Tax 15 Per Cent

Homeowners of Cook County won a double barreled victory on Wednesday when action from two different sources brought them definite slashes on their 1931 and 1932 tax bills.

Coincident with the ruling by County Judge Edmund K. Jarecki, that the 15% cut granted by the Board of Appeals on 1931 assessments of homes was legal, George Nixon, member of the Board, announced that a similar cut would be granted all owners of homes, two and three flats who filed complaints against their 1932 assessments. The ruling affect 438,000 homes and small apartment buildings.

The ruling of the county court was another link in the chain that for the past years has upheld the original cut order of the Board of Appeals on the 1931 assessments. It is the first time in the history of Cook County that actual tax reductions have been ordered on final tax bills.

More than 318,000 individual complaints were filed. It was on these cases that Judge Jarecki ruled, thus upholding the justice of the 15 per cent cut and the right of the Board of Appeals to make it.

AN OPEN LETTER to the VOTERS of the Seventh Senatorial
DistrictFrom
William McGee
JAMESRepublican Candidate for Representative in the General Assembly

In announcing my candidacy for the General Assembly, I am fully appreciative of the duties and responsibilities which devolve upon a member of that body; also I am mindful of the honor which is bestowed upon one who is permitted to serve in this position of trust and confidence and as such I shall regard it, if elected.

In this communication to you I desire to submit certain salient facts about myself and my platform. I was born in Story City, Iowa, and attended the public schools and high school at that place. During the war I volunteered my services and was permitted to serve you for fourteen months, ten months of which were overseas. After the war my education was resumed at the University of Iowa, University of Chicago and Chicago-Kent College of Law. All of my college work was procured through my own efforts.

In 1925 I was admitted to the Bar in Illinois. In 1926 I was appointed to the faculty of the Chicago-Kent College of Law where I have taught six different courses, in addition to practicing law. In eight years I have built up a high class, successful law practice, have found time, as a teacher, to help educate a large number of individuals who now are or shortly will be practicing lawyers, and have written and published articles on taxation and a five hundred and fifty page law book on probate practice.

My law practice has been of a nature that has kept me in constant touch with the practical operation of personal property, real property, inheritance, federal estate, federal income, stock transfer, capital stock and franchise taxes, and from constant contact with tax problems I have reached the conclusion that the real problem of taxation lies in finding ways and means of reducing expenditures and that it is indispensable that Governmental bodies devote some of the energy they are now devoting to devising ways and means of raising revenue to finding ways and means of reducing expenditures because, after all, regardless of what form of taxation is resorted to, Government must collect by taxes as much as they spend.

Included in my platform are recommendations for reducing Governmental expenditures, fair taxation for the Suburban home owners, of which I am one, revising the Criminal Code, reapportioning the State, shortening the ballot by making appointive those offices which particularly require technical knowledge and a revision of the Revenue Laws of Illinois.

I urge you to investigate carefully all of the candidates for the Legislature, including myself, and invite comparison. You will find, upon investigation, that I am a member of the Chicago Bar Association, Illinois Bar Association and American Bar Association, and that you will have no difficulty in ascertaining my standing as a member of the Bar, an educator and an author. If, after checking on the candidates, you believe that my education, experience and reputation as a lawyer, a Professor of Law and writer on taxation and the like, demonstrate that I will be an intelligent, aggressive, capable and honest Legislator, I ask you to support me on April 10th at the Primary by casting your vote for me.

The only low-priced car with fully-enclosed Knee-Action Wheels and what a difference that makes in performance and dependability

Simple as a Shock Absorber!

Chevrolet's "fully enclosed" Knee-Action is, in reality, a gigantic shock absorber, built solidly on to Chevrolet's big, heavy frame, with the front wheel solidly anchored to the "shock absorber" arm. The result: When the front wheel comes in contact with a bump or hole, it rises or falls to absorb the shock.

A smooth, restful, gliding ride . . . a bounceless back seat . . . a new feeling of safety and relaxation in high-speed or rough-road travel. All these pleasures are yours with Knee-Action wheels. And if your car has enclosed Knee-Action, like Chevrolet's, you not only get this gliding ride at its best, you also get two other extra advantages. One of these is shock-proof steering. And the other is dependable operation. The patent rights on this special kind of Knee-Action are held exclusively by General Motors. That's why no other low-priced car has it. Also, no other has a Fisher body, cable-controlled brakes, or a Blue-Flame engine of unsurpassed economy.

"A seat in Congress should be no sinecure. If a man is elected to Congress, he ought to go to Washington to work. If he does not intend to do that, he should not seek the office. Too many men in Congress, and too many seeking to enter it, regard the office as an adjunct to their own private business or profession—a means of serving private selfish interests—rather than a solemn obligation to represent the interests of the people with undivided fidelity. The result has been that our country has suffered, and will continue to suffer, as long as citizens are oblivious to this common violation of the sanctity of obligation. Public office is a public trust and should be regarded as such."

A Man of Experience, Integrity and Ability for an Important Office

CHARLES LAUTH REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE COUNTY TREASURER

Mr. Lauth has been a resident of Joliet for more than 40 years. He is a substantial taxpayer, and a representative, progressive citizen. His neighbors and those who know him best are among his strongest supporters in this campaign, which is the best evidence of the type of a man he is.

In seven years experience in county business—as Joliet Township supervisor, he made an enviable record for his capable business judgment and his conscientious attention to the county's business. His record as a county official is an open book.

Mr. Lauth would bring to the office of County Treasurer a full knowledge of the county's business that would be invaluable, and with his business judgment and absolute integrity would make an ideal official.

He is bound by no pledge or promise, other than his pledge to the people as a whole—that he will give the office his full time and the best of his ability, that he will comply with all the requirements of the law, and that every visitor to the office will be treated with courtesy and given every service possible.

What clean, automatic gas heat has done for Mrs. J. M. West, 213 W. 15th
Place, Chicago Heights

LOOK into the basement of a typical gas-heated home—see what happens when soot, dirt, and furnace mess have been eliminated! Like Mrs. West's, thousands of home owners now have clean basement playrooms, workrooms, game rooms—due to gas heat.

Imagine your own basement rid of the coal bin—rid of dirty ash buckets and furnace mess. Perhaps a game room, where the children are out of the way. Now that gas-heating rates are so low, it is pure folly to delay any longer. Think of it—gas heating rates are now only half of what they were during the 1930-31 heating season.

You invest nothing to try

And you can try gas heat without investing one cent! We will install a burner in your present furnace or boiler at our own expense. You pay only the rental on the equipment, which amounts to $3 a month in the average home. The charge is included with the bill for the gas you use. You try it for a month, two months, a year. And if within the year you find that you are not completely satisfied with gas, we will take it out at our expense and replace your former heating equipment in good workmanlike order. But if you decide to keep gas heat—as we think you will—the rental you have paid applies on the purchase price of the equipment.

Act now!

Don't delay! You never will regret accepting this liberal offer on gas heat. Call your nearest Public Service office for full information.

Mrs. West's basement kindergarten room is spic and span—thanks to gas heat. "And gas heat keeps the house right at the temperature we want it, night and day," says Mrs. West.

STARTLING TRIAL OFFER!

To prove that every home can afford to heat with gas, we'll install it at our expense . . . and remove it at our expense, if you don't like it.

YOU INVEST NOTHING!

Without ONE CENT of investment by you, we install the most modern burner in your furnace or boiler. If you are satisfied, it stays. If not—and you are the sole judge—out it comes and your former heating system is re-installed—AT OUR EXPENSE. We make this offer because of our confidence in the perfection of gas heat.

The West home at 213 W. 15th Place, Chicago Heights. More than 20,000 Chicagoland homes are now heating with gas.

Gas heat can be installed in your home without allowing the house to cool off

"You can't imagine what a difference it makes," says Mrs. West, "to get rid of all that basement mess—soot, dust and dirty ashes. Now it's just as clean as a pin all through the house."

You Never Have to Order Gas

You never have to order gas—it is always under orders to serve you.

Morning, noon, and night it is at your command.

Should you fail to stock your larder for the week-end, or should extra company visit you unexpectedly, you might have to scurry around to meet unforeseen demands.

Not so with gas.

Public Service Company of Northern Illinois has learned to anticipate your demands for fuel and how to meet them.

For many of its employees, Sundays and holidays means days devoted to your service. Day in and day out, through rain, sleet and snow, these workers are busy in order that an unfailing supply of gas flows to you instantly at your command.

A vote for Arthur E. Kelly for County Clerk will be a Vote for a new and younger leadership in the Republican party in Will County

Mr. Kelly, a native of Will County, is championing the cause of youthful and vigorous leadership in national, state and local government. His candidacy is the result of his consideration of the new deal in American politics.

Too long have public offices been held by a small, closely-knit group of political schemers, a clique which has spent years in the county court houses of Illinois because they cunningly connive to prevent others "from entering the garden patch". That it is recognized as an unofficial and unholy system is shown by the recent opinion rendered by Circuit Judge W. R. Hunter, in which he ordered the county clerk of Will county to reprint the 55,000 Republican ballots for the April 10th primaries at his (the county clerk's) own expense.

"The clerk acted with undue haste in ordering the ballots without first ascertaining what the ballot should contain," said Judge Hunter in upholding the mandamus action of two Republican candidates for state representative of the 41st district, who argued that the ballots had been marked with "vote for one or two" instructions in the general assembly race rather than "vote for one, two or three," thus favoring the incumbents.

"He had no authority to order this ballot at the time he did and in the form in which it has been printed," continued the judge in citing his opinion. "This record does not disclose that there was any lawful meeting held by the congressional committee (which body determines the manner and form in which the ballot is to be printed). For some time past it has been the tendency on the part of authorities to curtail the inalienable rights of citizens, and it is the duty of the courts to protect the citizens against the unlawful assaults upon their rights made by professional politicians.

This unlawful printing of ballots, it is alleged, was done to make the going easier for fellow incumbents in the political race. That is was unfair and illegal is recognized by everyone. Why permit the old deal to continue in power, when, as Judge Hunter indicated, it is not above board?

Mr. Kelly stands for new leadership. He feels that it is high time for public officials to lay their cards on the table. He believes that it should no longer be necessary for taxpayers to secure court action to get honest service out of county officials. He recognizes the fact that when the state law sets forth that the county clerk issue clean reports of the conduct of his office, the state law means just that. And he believes further that the taxpayers are entitled to the same consideration that an employer has a right to expect from an employee.

Mr. Kelly is a candidate for the office of county clerk on the sincere promise that his policy will be a fair deal, an open deal, as opposed to the secretive, under-cover old deal policies of the past decade in American and Will county politics.

His clerical and organizing ability, gained thru almost 20 years of activity with the E. J. and E. Railroad, the Steel Works club and the industrial division of the Joliet Y. M. C. A., will serve Will county taxpayer, to good stead, provided he is elected.
Born in Carbon Hill, Illinois, Grundy County in 1902; attended public schools and Joliet Township High School; Employed at E. J. and E. TO MY REPUBLICAN FRIENDS

Four years ago I was a candidate for the Republican nomination for the office of County Superintendent of Schools, opposing the present incumbent, who was then serving his third term in that office and is now serving the fourth. In the 1930 primary election I received 13,008 votes against his 14,156, losing by 1,148 votes, not so large a margin in a county so populous as ours.

In the 36 precincts outside of the Town of Joliet, in the territory most directly served by the County Superintendent of Schools, the vote was 3 to 2 in my favor, indicating that the people whose schools are directly served by that office desire that there be a change. The revelation of that primary has prompted me to seek a second time the Republican nomination for that important office.

The Republican party needs a strong candidate for that office in the election next November, for the Democrats will put forth for all county offices the most formidable opposition that lies within their choosing. It is my ambition to win the nomination and use my most diligent efforts to bring about a Republican victory in Will County next November.

This letter is written to you in the hope that you may see fit to give a portion of your time to the promotion of my candidacy. I shall be very grateful to you for any help that you may give me by recommending me to some of your many friends. You may feel free in assuring them that a vote for me is a vote for better schools and for the success of the Republican party in the next general election.

My most grateful appreciation for the support that you gave me four years ago is extended to you through this message.

Yours thankfully,

Millard F. Stone

A PIECE OF PAPER

By COSMO HAMILTON

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service

ON SHEPHERD'S mind was made up. He was going to kill a man in cold blood. He sat outside his trapper's shack on the marsh and cleaned his gun with a slow, brooding deliberation.

It was dusk when he had come home—home from the stretch they give to poachers in the county jail at Pennsboro. It was dark when he finished cleaning his gun. It smelled of oil and its barrels glistened in the thin new moonlight. He leaned it up against the shack.

All around him, in the Indian summer evening, the marsh stirred and was alive with old familiar sounds. Birds rustled in the grass; down near the landing a muskrat splashed; ducks were gabbling out in the bay. On the northern horizon the Pennsboro glow wavered between the flats and the stars. Over east, beyond the dunes, the autumn ocean mumbled and sucked at its strip of Carolina coast.

Jon Shepherd was part of all this, part of the life and soul of the marsh. He shared its somber moods, its invert fascination, its dark pride. Like the marsh, he could smile suddenly and become suddenly bleak. But now he had only murder in his heart. Only an obsession as cold, as deliberate, as it was unbalanced. He was going to kill the man who had been responsible for sending him to jail. He was going to do it tonight.

He lit a cigarette. The flare of the match snatched his face out of the dark. It exploded with noiseless light against the bony cheeks, the riveted black eyes, the aquiline nose, the thin lips gripping the cigarette. Jon Shepherd took two or three puffs on the cigarette and then flipped it into the damp marsh-grass, where it glowed and pulsed like a fire-beetle. It was tenacious, it wouldn't go out. He wondered whether Henry Garner would be as hard to kill.

For as long as Jon Shepherd could remember he and Henry Garner had been friends. Henry Garner had been rich; he himself had been poor. Henry Garner had been brought up in the big house beyond the woods near the Pennsboro road, while he had always lived in the trapper's shack. But none of these things had mattered until Henry Garner inherited the big house and began to invite fine guests down from Baltimore and Richmond and Philadelphia. Then one day he had warned Jon Shepherd to confine his trapping and shooting activities to the bay and the lower marsh, away from private property. He wanted to turn his own land into a sporting preserve. And when Shepherd had disregarded his warning—not once, but twice—Garner had sent him to jail.

The cigarette in the marsh-grass sizzled and went out. Shepherd stood up and reached for his gun. His body was a dark blotch against the shack, the shack was a pale blotch against the pines behind it, and the pines were a shaggy uncombed wilderness helter-skelter under the new moon. It was a grand night for loving or killing—whichever a man had a mind to do.

The killing itself would be very simple. There would be a short tramp through the woods to the big house near the Pennsboro road. Then there would be a creeping up to the window of the room where Henry Garner always sat about this time. After that there would be nothing left to do but ram the muzzle of the gun through a thin pane and coax a couple of tender triggers. It was all as simple as that. Jon Shepherd had no desire to leer at Henry Garner or to taunt him. He wanted to have it over with as soon as possible.

He tucked his shotgun in the crotch of his arm and walked unburiedly towards the strip of woods that marked the beginning of Garner's land. He walked inexorably, like a machine that had been wound up and pointed at a certain spot. At the edge of the woods he paused to make sure that the safety catch of his gun was all right. Although he knew every inch of the way, he didn't want his gun to go off if he tripped in the underbrush. Then he faced around for a last look eastward. The marsh curved darkly around the bay, and the bay lay asleep against the dim shoulders of the dunes. Beyond the dunes, the beat of the ocean seemed to keep time with the beat of the blood in Shepherd's chest and wrists and temples. But there was no need to hurry. There was no use getting excited.

Shepherd walked through the woods and skirted the field that lay in front of the big house where Garner lived. His state of mind was quite different from that of the average story-book murderer. No lurking fear clutched at his heart; none of the usual drops of sweat stood out on his brow. Everything was matter-of-fact, even the light that gleamed in the downstairs window and guided him, as he had known it would.

By using the cover of a clump of bushes it was easy to creep up to the lighted window. Shepherd crouched under the sill and gripped his gun with both hands, ready for a smashing blow at the pane. Then he stood up deliberately and looked in. His face slid up into the light and poised there, rapt, staring.

Nobody was there. Nobody was in the room.

For a moment it seemed to Shepherd that his plan had failed. Every long slow day in the Pennsboro jail had focussed his obsession on this time and on this place. Then he realized that Garner must be somewhere very near. The coals of the fire smoldered in the grate and there was an open magazine on the arm of Garner's usual chair. There were two glasses and a bottle on the table, which indicated that Garner had a visitor. Garner and his visitor, whoever it was, must be out on the veranda at the other side of the house, because the night was beautiful and warm.

Keeping close to the wall, Shepherd edged around the corner and worked his way towards the veranda. Suddenly he heard Garner's voice say something in a low tone. Then it stopped and there was no answer. Shepherd reached the side of the veranda and paused, wondering how best to do this killing quickly. Recognition didn't matter, because everybody would know he had shot Garner anyway.

Just then he heard the other voice. It was a woman's, soft and thrilling, and it was saying something that seemed very important. It was a voice that had a startling effect on the man crouching in the shadows with the gun. At first vaguely familiar, like a vanished dream, then it began to burn its way into him with a soft fiery music that washed away his murderous obsession and his consciousness of time and place. In all the world there was only this voice—and he was listening to it.

"It's just because I love you so much that I must tell you, Henry," it said. "If I hurt you it's only because it would hurt me more to be divided from you by my secret."

"Tell me," said Garner's voice quietly.

"It was a wounded boy behind the lines." The other voice was very steady. "He was going back to the front. It wasn't pity, either. It was something else that I couldn't explain even to myself. He was so alone, so brooding, so passionately strange. My sense of values was warped then, too. I suppose. Anyway, he loved me. He wanted me."

"I see," said Garner's voice. "It happened the night before he went back." The other voice faltered a little. "I never saw him again. He wrote me letters for a while—sweet, strange, illiterate letters. And, foolishly, perhaps, I answered one of them. But that has never worried me. I trusted him."

There was a little silence and then Garner's voice said, "Yes, that was foolish. A letter like that is only a piece of paper, but it can be a terrible weapon. But it can't be now, can it?"

"No," said the other voice. "It can't be now."

The crouching figure beside the veranda straightened up and leaned against the wall. Jon Shepherd's face was a pale expressionless mask in the faint light.

"You're brave," said Garner's voice. There was a slight sound like a kiss. "It's past now. I love you."

When Jon Shepherd got back to his shack he went inside and groped around for the box in which he kept his shotgun shells. Then he broke his gun mechanically, took out the two unused shells, and put them back in the box.

There was an old duffle bag in one corner of the room, and Shepherd went over to it and knelt down. He knew exactly where the letter was. His hand closed on it and pulled it out. He crouched there with it in the darkness. A piece of paper? A terrible weapon? Were these all this wonderful letter could be?

Suddenly he struck a match and touched the flame to the dog-eared envelope. The paper began to burn brighter and brighter until the light was dancing with the shadows on the walls. But Jon Shepherd's shadow was huge and quiet and shapeless.

When the letter burned down and began to scorch his fingers he dropped it on the floor and went outside. There was no moon. The marsh and bay and dunes were one blur under the stars. Shepherd walked down the rotting boardwalk to the landing. His old boat was still there—half full of water, but that didn't matter. He climbed into it and began to row.

He rowed the boat towards the Pennsboro lights that wavered above the northern horizon. Pretty soon he noticed, without surprise, that his shack was burning. He leaned on his oars to watch it. It became a gigantic torch that lighted his farewell view of the marsh with a red glare.

Jon Shepherd bent to his oars again. The bay was rippling up. The breeze was shifting into the northeast. There would be fine duck hunting weather in a day or two. And Garner's gun would be booming back there in the flats.

Preventing Bad Dreams

YOU find yourself dreaming for two or three nights in succession and the dreams are not pleasant. All sorts of unpleasant situations arise in these dreams, in some of which you are a coward, sometimes see terrible accidents occur, perhaps a loved one is in danger, and other distressing events occur, so that it is with great relief that you wake to find that it was only a dream.

You try to remember what you had eaten that night before you retired only to find that it was the same as usual, so that the bad dream was not due to food.

As you know we have those who can interpret dreams or at least claim to be able to do so.

There are many well known nerve specialists who have seemingly been able to help certain nervous cases by interpreting their dreams; bringing them into the light of day as it were.

What may be the cause of these bad dreams? Are they due to some "mental" or nervous condition?

There is no question but that our mental attitude, our mental condition (particularly if we are tired mentally) often has much to do with causing dreams.

However one of the frequent causes of bad dreams and one that is overlooked, is that waste products remain too long in the system and act as a poison in the blood. It is this poison that often causes bad dreams. Dr. S. Kater, Munich, was able to give help to a number of nervous patients afflicted with bad dreams by making sure that these wastes were thrown out of the body. The wastes usually accumulate by eating more food than the body needs.

By the use of medicines which remove wastes not only from the large intestines but from the blood also, dreams are prevented in many cases.

By the simple method of doing some hard physical work such as sawing wood, shoveling sand, perspiration is induced, the bowels move regularly, excess wastes are removed and no bad dreams occur.

This method of hard physical exercise, instead of complete rest, has cured many "mental" cases.

Mental Hygiene in Childhood

IT HAS been said that childhood is the golden period for mental hygiene.

Educators tell us that if they can get children from birth to the age of seven, they can do the real foundation work for life.

What is mental hygiene anyway? Is it some special department or department of life and training?

As a matter of fact mental hygiene simply means preparing or training children and adults in such a way that they can adjust themselves to life; that is be able to earn a living and be able to get along with other people, respecting the rights of others, and seeing that others respect their rights also.

And the training for mental hygiene must begin in the home with the parents. A quarrelsome, nagging, untidy home with many emotional upsets, is bound to affect the emotions and actions of the children.

It was my privilege some years ago to examine some hundreds of boys in a reformatory.

I found all types of boys, mental and physical, but the outstanding fact I got from questioning and from the records was that most of these boys came from unhappy quarrelsome homes. By actual count I found that in more than one-half the cases, the parents of these boys were not living together.

Truly childhood is the period when everything possible must be done to prevent frequent mental, moral and physical defects.

Dr. F. P. Norburg, Jacksonville, Ill., says "Childhood is the golden period of mental hygiene because it became apparent that when one discusses nervous and mental illnesses, delinquency, dependence on others, education and industrial failure, divorce and broken homes, one was not discussing a series of different problems, but really the same problem, that is the inability of individuals to adjust themselves to a complex social life, because of the lack of control of their emotions. And as the ground work for organizing or controlling the emotions is laid in childhood that period becomes the golden period of mental hygiene."

The thought then is that all of us should think of our own home life and our obligations to our children, that teachers always insist kindly but firmly on discipline, that fairness to the child and to his companions be ever uppermost in mind.

If we keep our mental balance, children will likely do the same.

Jefferson Davis' Power

Jefferson Davis first became prominent in politics as a member of the house of representatives and later as a senator from Mississippi. He served in the Mexican war, having been educated at West Point. During President Pierce's administration Davis was secretary of war, and was said to rule both President and cabinet. In 1857 he was returned to the senate, where he remained until chosen President of the Confederacy in 1861.

Lesson for April 8

THE CHILD AND THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 18:1-14;
19:13-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. Matt. 19:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Blesses the Children.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus and His Smallest Friends.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Entering and Growing in the Kingdom.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Sin of Neglecting and Misguiding Children.

I. The Greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven (vv. 1-4).

1. The disciple's question (v. 1). The prominence given to Peter in connection with the announcement of Christ's purpose to build the church and the payment of tribute with the money in the fish's mouth, provoked jealousy on the part of the other disciples. Seeing that the kingdom was to come to realization despite the tragedy of the cross, the disciples thought it best to have settled their place of rank in the kingdom. Instead of entering into sympathy with Jesus in the dark hour of his passion, they were supremely concerned with the dignities to be conferred.

2. Jesus' answer (vv. 2-4). Two vital truths stand out in his reply:

a. Condition of entrance into the kingdom (v. 3). He showed them that the great question which should concern them was as to whether they were really in the kingdom. Their behavior revealed the fact that they needed conversion before they could enter into the kingdom.

b. Those possessing childlike humility are the greatest (v. 4). It is highly important that we understand childlike humility. The child is dependent, lowly, and docile. Doctor Morgan sets forth the following characteristics of childlike humility:

(1) Imperfection. The child is not only the emblem of imperfection but is subconsciously aware of it. Because of this it awaits instruction and correction in order for development.

(2) Simplicity. All the powers of the child's being express themselves freely, readily, and naturally.

(3) Submissiveness. While the child has inherited sin yet it yields to the touch of the skillful hand.

II. Jesus' Identification. With His Believing Ones (v. 5-9).

1. Receiving the believer in Christ's name is receiving Christ (v. 5). Through faith in Christ we become God's children, and so completely is our life interwoven with his that he regards treatment of us as treatment of himself.

2. The awful peril of causing a believer to stumble (vv. 6-9). To cause to stumble means to give occasion for a moral fall. This particularly refers to the carnality and selfishness which were expressing themselves in the disciples' contention for pre-eminence. Their behavior was not only an injury but a stumbling block to others. Every Christian should solemnly inquire as to whether his life would help or hinder his fellow believers. Sinning against Christ's own will meet a sure and awful fate.

III. The Heavenly Father's Special Care for Believers (vv. 10-14).

1. They are under angelic guardianship (v. 10). So precious is the believer in God's sight that angelic messengers are provided (Heb. 1:10).

2. The Son of man came especially to save the lost (vv. 11-14). The heavenly Father does not will that anyone should perish. All are the objects of the Father's seeking love.

IV. Jesus Receiving Little Children (Matt. 19:13-15).

The setting of this text should be most carefully noted. Jesus had been speaking of the sanctity of marriage which is the bulwark of the home. Into the sacred enclosure of the home comes childhood to complete and enable it.

1. Children brought to Jesus (v. 13). Most likely they were brought by their parents. Parents naturally desire the blessing of the Lord for their children. Many parents who are careless as to themselves, desire to bring their children into touch with Jesus Christ.

2. Rebuked by the disciples (v. 13). They regarded children as too insignificant to engage the Lord's attention.

3. The disciples rebuked by Christ (v. 14). These words uttered by the Lord have placed a peculiar dignity upon children.

4. Christ laid his hands upon the children (v. 15). This action no doubt indicated his pronouncement of blessing upon them and his tenderness for them.

Our Duty to Make Enemies

To incur enmity is a necessary part of the life of triumph in Christ. Christians carry to men a message of death as well as of life; and men know it. If we speak and live the whole counsel of God we shall not sin by making friends among those who ought to be our enemies.

Knows What's Best

God is too wise not to know all about us, and what is really best for us to be, and to have.

Following Old Custom,
Venetian Girls Parade

Twelve weddings will be the result of a score of girls, bent on finding husbands, riding the canals of Venice in heavily beflowered gondolas, reviving a traditional Venetian marriage custom.

In days of old, the doges of the city believed in matrimony and "more babies," just as Mussolini does today. To encourage marriages, the doges used to assign a dowry to 12 girls chosen from among many candidates. The fortunate young women were then paraded in a richly decorated boat through the city canals to attract the attention of all eligible young men. The ceremony unfailingly occurred on the feast of the Purification of the Virgin.

The marriage hunt was commemorated every year uninterruptedly from 944 A. D. until the Fourteenth century, when Venetian girls became self-conscious and shy and refused to submit to the "humiliating" public search for a husband. It was then thought to replace the girls by dummies, but the attempt proved a failure.

Whose Fault?

The Boy or Girl Who Refuses to Eat

"What have I ever done to deserve a child who refuses to eat, and is just skin and bones?" The mother who asks that question might be surprised to learn that she alone is to blame. She knows a lack of appetite is the sign of a clogged system, but does the wrong thing to remedy the condition. A violent cathartic that upsets the stomach pulls down a child like a spell of sickness. It often forms the laxative habit. A more sensible way of regulating children is explained in the column to the right:

It's a lucky girl whose mother knows how to regulate her children's bowels without some strong, evil-tasting cathartic that upsets the system and ruins their appetite! Whenever sluggishness coats the little tongue, makes the whites of the eyes a bilious yellow, or a child is headachy and fretful, just try pure California Syrup of Figs. The sense in this fruit laxative is so agreeable to take, so natural in habit. A more sensible way of regulating children is explained in action! Get real California Syrup of Figs at any drug store. The bottle should say "California".

"I keep fit

"...in these days of recovery... if I don't, someone else will have my job." How? "Well, I learned years ago that work... wear and tear... takes something out of men and women—particularly those who work indoors."

"I tore down those precious red-blood-cells faster than my good body could rebuild. A friend told me the story of that grand medicine S.S.S. Now at 4 P. M. I am fit to still 'carry on'."

If you feel weak... lack a keen appetite... or if your skin is pale... try S.S.S. Unless your case is exceptional, you should soon notice a pick up in your appetite... your color and skin should improve with increased strength and energy.

S.S.S. is not just a so-called tonic but a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also having the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-globin of the blood to enable you to "carry on," without exhaustion as you should naturally. THREE STATES JOINED FOR
BIRTHDAY REUNION

The Rev. M. F. Ham, evangelistic minister, celebrated his wife's birthday the other day in Louisville, Ky., although at the time he was conducting services in Little Rock, Ark. It was made a complete family reunion
when the daughter, in Oklahoma City, Okla., also took part.

A three-way telephone conversation was arranged for when it was found that the family could not be united otherwise. The clergyman placed the call to his wife from Little Rock and another call to the daughter in Oklahoma City. Thus an event which otherwise could not have been held, passed off with unusual success.

FIRE DEPARTMENT QUELLS
BLAZE BY APPOINTMENT

It was a very accommodating fire which called out part of the fire department in St. Paul, Minn., the other day. In fact, it was a fire by appointment.

A trolley car caught fire on a busy downtown street, and the conductor telephoned the alarm to fire headquarters. In giving the location the conductor added: "But we can't wait here. We're blocking traffic. Go to Eighth and Cedar Streets and we'll bring the fire around there."

A fire department truck was sent to keep the appointment, and the blaze was extinguished with little damage.

Facts About the Telephone

The desk telephone first came into use at subscribers' stations in 1886.

Radio telephone communication between France and Algeria was established recently.

The daily average of telephone calls in the Greater Boston district is about 2,000,000, but during a severe storm this past winter there was a 50 per cent increase, bringing the daily average up to more than 3,000,000.

As Bell System telephone service is practically world-wide, so too is the distribution of stockholders of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the parent company of the System. These stockholders are located in every state in the Union and in every important foreign country except Russia.

The total number of people living in the world on January 1, 1933, was 2,040,000,000, according to an estimate recently completed by the Statistical Department of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The number of telephones in service in the world on the same date figures up to approximately 33-400,000. Consequently, there is an average of one telephone for every sixty-one persons in the world.
